Cornell University

At Cornell University, we are committed to ensuring that students with disabilities have equal access to all university programs and activities. Policies and procedures have been developed to allow students to be as independent as possible, to preserve confidentiality, and to provide students who have disabilities with the same exceptional opportunities that are available to all Cornell students.

Student Disability Services (SDS) facilitates accommodations for students with disabilities and/or medical conditions to ensure equal access. Examples of covered conditions include: Attention Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD); learning disabilities; neurological disorders (traumatic brain injury, epilepsy, Tourette's Syndrome); chronic medical conditions (Crohn's disease, diabetes, asthma, severe allergies); mobility disabilities; psychiatric disabilities (bipolar disorder, depression, post-traumatic stress disorder); sensory disabilities (hearing, vision). Examples of accommodations include extended time for test-taking, specific housing options, support for medically-restricted diets, transportation assistance, and adaptive technology.

If you have a disability or medical condition and think you will require some type of accommodation, please complete this form and return it, along with your disability documentation, to SDS. Services will be provided upon completion of the following steps:

1. Submission of this Request for Disability Services and Accommodations Form.
2. Submission of current and comprehensive disability documentation. Documentation guidelines are available at <http://sds.cornell.edu>
3. Documentation has been reviewed and eligibility for disability services has been verified by SDS.
4. You have met with an SDS staff person for an initial intake interview (unless specific housing is the only accommodation requested).

We strongly encourage you to submit this request with your disability documentation well before your arrival on campus. Doing so will facilitate the timely provision of accommodations approved by SDS. Information provided to SDS is confidential. Documentation and evaluation information will not be released without the signed consent of the student.
